Outsourcing

The video pretty much gives you my top picks if you are looking to outsource the content. However I thought I would give you some written material to back the video up and give you some templates you can use for places like Elance when you are posting the job.

The 3 main websites I use to get content are:

<http://www.iwriter.com>

<http://www.elance.com>

<http://www.warriorforum.com/warriors-hire/>

Obviously before we begin and like I mention in the video I recommend that you build your first 2 or 3 sites from scratch yourself so you understand the process. You don't have too of course but it can save you money and following the content report you should be able to churn out some pretty good content yourself.

However if time is an issue and you really want to outsource then the above sites are the ones to use.

Let us go through each site one by one so I can give you some pointers:

IWriter.com

This is my #1 pick and the main reason for this is that it is solely for content such as articles or ebooks. All you need to do with this one is watch through the video; remember that the keywords section you will want to enter the titles of each product.

Also in the additional information section you can put what these articles are going to be used for and how you want them laid out with the question strategy as mentioned in the content section.

Also make sure you pick the top level writers here or at least the middle option. You could go for standard but you might have to re-write them and that defeats the object.

Next up we have:

Elance.com

This is a place where you can get more than articles but there are a ton of writers here.

The beauty of this site is that when you post a job it will allow you to put a job description in and you can expand on what you need.

Here is a template you can use:

“I am looking for 5 articles to be written for different Amazon products. One of the articles (for the main product) should be 2000 words long. The other 4 can be 600 words each.

I will provide the product links and make it clear which one is the main product.

The tone of the articles should be in a “review” format and gearing people toward purchasing the main product.

I am looking to pay $60-$80 for this project.

The articles must be written by people that have English as their first language.

All content MUST be unique and will be copyscaped.

I am looking for this content as fast as possible and if the job is good you will get future work.

Thank you for your interest,

Your Name,”

You can use the above for a template when you are posting a job on Elance. Also you will receive messages from interested people and can reply to them to give them more details.

Once you find someone that fits the bill, remember to look at the reviews as mentioned in the video and then what normally happens is you fund the account from your Paypal.

You get to pick when to release the payment at the click of a button once the work is accurate.

The next place is of course the Warrior forum.

This is really good to get content as you see a lot of Warriors competing and they do that through their prices so you can get some deals.

Make sure you look at the reviews here and try and get someone that keeps on bumping their thread in the services section. If they have had a lot of views and some decent reviews you can almost be sure that they will be good.

I recommend that you use the outsourcing once you have got some money coming in from your review sites.

If you have any questions head over to the forum and let me know,

To Your Success,

Chris Jones
